Improving the family support of parents who have a child with a life-limiting condition: a qualitative study. Parents whose children have a life-limiting condition are often overwhelmed and experience negative impacts on their lives. Support of the family is essential to enable them to cope with the loss and to improve their quality of life. Family support services for parents of children with a life-limiting condition are being introduced in various countries. There is a lack of research on how services can be developed to improve families' experiences of support. To improve family support, the 'family system framework' was developed in the United Kingdom 82157476af
